

Zero-Carbon Democracy?

State and Capital in the Age of Climate Change 2/12/2021

Alyssa Battistoni, Harvard University

We investigate the possibilities and challenges of using the state to constrain carbon-intensive capital, and analyze environmental regulation alongside social welfare programs as sites of class struggle. Finally, we analyze environmental regulation alongside social welfare programs as sites of contestation and ask whether and how states can act to impose limits on fossil capital without undermining their own sources of revenue and legitimacy.

