

GEOG 3751

Geography of Appalachian Ohio

Maymester 2015 (May 18-27)

The forest is our classroom for a 10-day field course examining the socioecology of southeast Ohio, including:

- Thematic focus on land use change, political ecology, conservation and restoration ecology, historical geography, and regional development
- Visits to forests, mines, company towns, businesses, and more
- Talks by local experts
- Hands-on experience of research in human-environment geography

- Lectures on 5/18, 5/27 in Derby Hall
- Field location: Hocking, Athens, Perry counties
- Lodging: Camp Oty'okwa, Hocking Co.
- Course is part of May session and free for full-time students
- Fee for lodging & food: $250
- Course text available at SBX
- Instructor: K. McSweeney

Past students' impressions:

"I would highly recommend this to others as exposure to unique field work"

"One of the most interesting and well-constructed courses I've taken."

"It was so different from all other courses I've taken in college and felt like an environment in which I truly could learn."

Interested? We are anticipating high demand for this course, which is capped at 20. Please send a brief statement of interest to Brooke Raake, Geography Advisor, raake.5@osu.edu, by March 15.
